Another safety first for Lorien

Lorien Engineering Solutions has become one of the first companies in the UK to be awarded CDM Registered Practice status. It has been accredited by the Association for Project Safety, having been one of a select group of companies to take part in a trial audit.

While CDM covers all industries, the food and drink sector has some special conditions that need to be addressed. The high churn of new products means that manufacturing systems are altered and sections added on a regular basis. Some plant operators fail to realise that many of these installations fall within the category of Notifiable Projects.

Bill Treddenick, Lorien operations director, says, "We are very proud to be one of the first companies in the UK to be awarded CDM Registered Practice status. It is a fitting testament to the company's committed and innovative approach to health and safety."
