Despite the uncertain economic picture, Lorien Engineering Solutions' continuing international success is being boosted by the creation of a Central European base in Poland.

In opening its first overseas office this summer, managing director Steve Slater revealed that the Lichfield-based company is in great shape, and is continuing its international expansion.

The new branch office will be known as Lorien Engineering Polska, and will be based in the historic city of Wroclaw in the South-West of Poland. From there the firm will be strongly positioned to develop its existing presence in the country's food, brewing and health care sectors, and the office will act as a European hub for the firm's many international clients who have a growing presence in the region.
